be discussed, including the clouded history of restrictions to the collection, which today are no longer in place. The role of the Library of Congress of many prominent analysts, will be highlighted. From its founding the SFA has been committed to preserving and disseminating Freud's writings. The workshop will conclude with a description of the project, funded through the generous support of the Polonsky Foundation, to digitalize and post to the web the holograph papers of Sigmund Freud.

The 79th Oral History Workshop, "Anna Freud Revisited," addressed four topics: 1) The postwar trajectory of Anna Freud's theoretical and clinical thinking, as illustrated in the 16 papers she published in "The Psychoanalytic Study of the Child" between 1945 and 1965; 2) The evolution of Anna Freud's child analysis clinical practice, and her growing recognition that some children require a developmental approach in the therapeutic situation; 3) The pedagogical and theoretical legacy of the Hietzing School, founded by Anna Freud and Dorothy Burlington, is explored through the writings of Erik Erikson, who taught at the school; 4) A retrospective account of the experience, and enduring influence, of undergoing the four-year child analysis training program at the Hampstead Clinic under the aegis of Anna Freud. newly released interviews with the Wolf-Man; 4) reflections on the contested status of the case of the Wolf-Man in contemporary psychoanalytic training; 5) and the Wolf-Man's artistic representation of his dream through the lens of art history. After attending this session, participants should be able to: 1) Discuss the complex and layered legacy of the case of the Wolf-Man; 2) Explain why the place of this case in the contemporary psychoanalytic curriculum is the subject of current debate.
