Introduction To Psychoanalytic Theory:
The Structure of the Mind and the Nature of Defense

Fellowship in Psychoanalytic Psychotherapy

Boston Psychoanalytic Society and Institute
Fall, 2014
José A. Saporta, MD

- 1) To introduce the four main models of the mind in psychoanalysis; to think critically of these models; to get a sense of how these different models have been applied to different clinical situations.
- 2) To view defenses, or the ways in which we ward off knowledge about ourselves and experience, through the lens of the different psychoanalytic schools. To appreciate how the content of what is kept from our experience and the nature of the defenses used differs according to the different psychoanalytic schools or models of the mind.

Session I: October 2

Learning Objectives

1. The student can name the main schools for psychoanalysis, articulate the relationship of psychoanalytic theories of the mind to clinical work, and cite factors relevant to the development of psychoanalytic theories.
2. The student can define the fundamental features of the drive theory of classical Freudian theory of the mind and can articulate the relationships between desire, affect, and psychic conflict.
3. The student can define the fundamental features of the ego psychology model of the mind, the notion of compromise formation and defense.
4. The student can distinguish the concept of defense from that of ego deficit and can understand the fundamental features of impaired “mentalizing” as an instance of ego deficit.
5. The student will articulate the fundamental features of the object relations theory of the mind and will distinguish the fundamental features of the theories of Klein, Fairbairn, and Winnicott.
6. The student will articulate the difference between concepts of intra-psychic defense from conflict theory and notions of defense from object relations theory, including inter-personal forms of defense such as projective identification.
7. The student will articulate two forms of psychological defense which are related to different psychopathologies: the defense against feels as a defense against relating, and the “splitting” of the mind—or compartmentalization and lack of integration of experience.
8. The student will articulate the fundamentals of attachment theory and articulate the clinical manifestations of different forms of insecure attachment.
9. The student will articulate the fundamental features of the relational school of psychoanalysis and distinguish this from non-relational theory, and the student will articulate the concept of context dependence of psychological functioning.
10. The student will articulate the main ways in which severe psychological trauma interrupts psychological functioning and how this form of psychological disruption differs from psychopathology as conceived the other psychoanalytic models covered.
